

Necessary Personal Skills of an Educator

The following information has been provided by the Texas Education Agency for compliance purposes only. No endorsement of the information sources is implied.

Patience

This is likely the single most important skill. Some students can be obstinate or lack respect for authority. Every good teacher needs patience in order to find a way to work with students and earn their respect.

Adaptability

Different kids learn in different ways, and some lessons need unique teaching tools. Good teachers know how to adapt their lesson plans to their students, so that all the kids learn optimally. This trait can take some experience and practice in a classroom setting, so give it time.

Imagination

Whether you teach high school chemistry or kindergarten, nothing is a more effective tool than using your imagination to create new and interesting ways for your students to learn. You may be inspired by the work of another teacher, mentor or a TV commercial - it doesn't matter. All that matters is that you take the initiative to find new ways for your kids to learn the material.

Teamwork

Teachers could have a hard time without a wide variety of support staff around them. If you feel alone, your school principal, administrative staff, parent-teacher committee, and more are often available to provide help. By working as a team, you may have an easier time increasing your students' ability to learn and have fun.

Risk Taking

Sometimes to get the big reward, you may need to take a risk. Being a teacher is about finding a way to get kids to learn, and sometimes these new learning methods can be risky. Stick to it and you'll soon find that others are following your teaching example.

Constant Learning

You can never know too much when you are a teacher, especially when it comes to the best way to teach students. Great teachers are constantly looking for ways to expand their horizons with courses, workshops, and seminars. Make sure you don't become stagnant - take courses to keep the content fresh in your mind.

Communication

No teacher will succeed if they don't have good communication skills. Clear, concise, and to the point - the better your communication skills are, the easier your lessons will be. There are many classes available to help teacher improve their skills.

Mentoring

Teachers need to always remember that, aside from parents, they are one of the most consistent mentors in a child's life. That means setting a good example, at all times. Teachers may have students that they mentor, which means that being a good role model is even more important.

Leadership

Another important skill a teacher must have is leadership. Students need someone to guide them, to be in charge, and to set the tone of the class.
